EFFECTS OF JAIL LIFE ON LINDBERGH KIDNAP SUSPECT ARE VERY EVIDENT; PRISONER KEEPS IRON HOLD ON SELF DURING INCARCERATION

Is as Adamant As Ever That He Wasn't Man Who Went Up Ladder at Flier's Home in Hopewell, N. J., and Seized Baby From Crib — Will Be Lone Defendant When Murder Trial Opens On January 2nd.

This is the third of a series of articles on the approaching trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, the Lindbergh case defendant, by America's greatest reporter.

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1934, by International News Service)

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 12 — (INS) — Bruno Richard Hauptmann—reiterating his "I am innocent" contention in the face of incriminating evidence—continues to be an enigmatic figure.

Today, some three months after his arrest with a $20 Lindbergh ransom bill in his possession, he is as adamant as ever that he wasn't the man who went up the ladder at the Lindbergh home at Hopewell, N. J., on the night of March 1, 1932, seized little Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., from his crib and subsequently killed the baby whose body was found weeks later in the brush not far from a New Jersey highway.

On January 2 Hauptmann will be the lone defendant answering in the Hunterdon County court to the charge that he murdered the Lindbergh baby.

Hauptmann is being closely guarded in his cell in the county jail here. He was arrested in New York on September 19 and put up a losing fight against extradition to New Jersey.

He has lost some weight during his incarceration in the Flemington jail. But he remains the same cold-eyed, steel-nerved, poker-faced individual who mystified the authorities from the moment of his arrest. He is one of the cageiest prisoners ever caught in the toils of the law.

Hauptmann still claims he is innocent and that he has no knowledge of the kidnaping of the baby.

He has been visited many times in the jail here by his loyal wife, Anna, and their year-old son, Manfred, and also by the chief counsel for the defense, Edward Reilly, a veteran of 1,000 homicide cases. Hauptmann released James M. Fawcett, the attorney who defended him during the extradition proceeding in New York, and took over Reilly's new chief counsel. He and Reilly have gone over defense plans quite thoroughly.

The Hauptmann case has received so much publicity that nearly every man and woman has a decided opinion regarding the guilt or innocence of the prisoner.

Nearly everybody was convinced that the state of New York had an airtight extortion case against Hauptmann. But there is a sharp difference of opinion as to whether the state of New Jersey has a sure-fire case against the defendant. New Jersey, however, insists that it has.

Ask the average man or woman for an opinion of Hauptmann and the average answer at this writing is something like this:

"I think he is guilty in the sense of having been in on the getting of the Lindbergh ransom money. But, as for the actual kidnaping and killing of the baby—well, I don't know whether I could convict him of that on the evidence so far revealed by the state of New Jersey."

The fact police found $14,590 of the $20,000 Lindbergh ransom money in Hauptmann's home and garage in the Bronx, New York City, was regarded as highly incriminating by the authorities.

Hauptmann's explanation was that his money was left in his safekeeping by a former friend, Isidor Fisch, now dead. Fisch went to Germany in December, 1933, and died in Leipzig of tuberculosis last March. Hauptmann claims Fisch left two suit cases and a shoe box with him when he left New York for abroad.

The shoe box contained the money. Hauptmann told the police he put the shoe box in a closet, not knowing it contained Lindbergh ransom bills. About three or four weeks before his arrest, he further explained, rain slipped through the roof into a closet where the shoe box had been put. It was only then, Hauptmann insisted, that he learned the box contained money. He declared he did not know the money was part of the Lindbergh ransom until after he was arrested.

Could this be true?

The authorities scoff at this "Fisch story." They characterized it as very fishy.

Tomorrow, Mr. Kilgallen will discuss Hauptmann's alibi as to his whereabouts at the time the Lindbergh baby was kidnaped.

FINALLY GETS DEER
WILKES-BARRE — (INS) — For 20 years, Isaac Bencoter, of Muhlenberg, travelled thousands of miles and expended hundreds of dollars in an attempt to bag a deer.

Lady Luck, however, frowned on Bencoter. One year, every member of his party shot a deer but he failed to get one.

Not to be discouraged, Bencoter started on a hunting trip recently with a friend. The party was about 100 feet away from Bencoter's house when a large buck approached.

Bencoter nonchalantly left his car, aimed his gun and fired. He got his first deer.

Lights Are Torn From Community X'mas Tree

The strings of electric lights which adorned the community Christmas tree at Mill and Radcliffe streets, have been torn from the tree, apparently by some careless motorist who drove too close to the tree.

This is the third time that the lights have been ripped from the tree and some are of the opinion that perhaps it is being done maliciously. If the guilty person is caught he will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

The lights were torn loose twice last year and each time the necessary repairs were made.

They are being repaired again this year and will be replaced.

CONSIDER POSSIBILITY OF FORMING H. S. BAND

Special Meeting of Students and Parents To Be Held Here Monday Evening

4 WEEKS' TRIAL COURSE

Possibilities of formation of a band among students of Bristol high school are being discussed. Yesterday approximately 350 students of the high school listened to Mr. Brower of the Brower Conservatory of Music, Collingswood, N. J., as he spoke of the possibilities of such, and many of the students are also planning to attend a special meeting in the high school auditorium next Monday evening at eight o'clock, in company with their parents.

At the meeting next Monday, to which no student will be admitted unless accompanied by their parents, representatives of the musical company will demonstrate the various instruments which make up a school band, giving an idea of the tone, quality, and ability needed to play such.

Then there will be offered a four-week trial course of instruction, with two lessons per week. Only a very small charge will be made for this trial course to cover rental of instruments. Thus parents and students will not be financially obligated to any great extent, or find it necessary to purchase expensive instruments, only a few weeks later to learn they do not care for the instruments. At the end of the four-week period, if this plan is accepted, a concert will be given by the trial group. Then the students and parents can decide if they wish the work continued. The company suggesting the plan claims it has never had a failure where it has started any such project.

At the meeting yesterday the representative showed the various types of instruments necessary in a school band, thus giving the students an opportunity to form an opinion on the instrument they would prefer to play.

"That Lucas Family" To Be Staged By Langhorne Seniors

LANGHORNE, Dec. 12 — People of Langhorne and vicinity are looking forward to the play entitled "That Lucas Family" to be staged by the senior class of Langhorne-Middletown high school in South Langhorne Casino, Friday evening.

The play is a riotous three act comedy about a typical family composed of Mr. and Mrs. Lucas and their 17 year old twins, Ruth and Bab.

The senior orchestra and harmony quartette will give selections between the acts. The play is to defray the expense of the Washington trip.

Choir of Methodist Church Entertained by Miss Betz

Members of Bristol M. E. Church were entertained last evening at the home of Miss Carolyn Betz, Bristol Pike.

Radio and other games were played and refreshments served. Prize winners in the game of radio were Miss Louise Smoyer and Howard Smoyer.

Attendants were: The Misses Carrie Worthington, Louise Smoyer, Marion Walters, Beulah Stackhouse and Helen Appleton; Mrs. Margaret Warwick; Mrs. Livingston Joyce, Mrs. Emily Orr, Mrs. Charles Rathke, Mrs. Ida Miller, Mrs. Ella Winslow, Mr. and Mrs. William Wright, Mr. and Mrs. William Kershaw and Messrs. James Douglass and Howard Smoyer.

PASTOR'S AID MEETING

The Pastor's Aid Society of Bristol M. E. Church will meet at the home of Mrs. Carrie McBrien, 316 Madison street, tomorrow at three o'clock.

BABY ARRIVES

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Jones, 248 Harrison street, are receiving congratulations upon the birth of a daughter last week.

HUMOROUS COMBINATION

(By "The Stroller")

A Frigidair truck carrying a bale of hay and towing a green sedan attracted the attention of those along the streets yesterday.

It amused a number who viewed it and some wisecrackers commented that they wondered if the hay was for the sedan or to pack around a refrigerator to protect it from the extreme cold.

NUMBER ONE PUBLIC ENEMIES

New York American, Dec. 9, 1934

We recognized Russia. Now it is just as well to recognize what we recognized. It is the same old Russia as under the Czars. It is the same old tyranny under a different name. There is the same old protest by assassination against cruelty and tyranny.

There is the same old wholesale indiscriminate massacre of opponents of the despotism, whether those slaughtered be guilty or innocent of crime.

There is the same old injustice and oppression and the same old implacable hatred by the people of rule by blood and iron.

There is the same old conflict for position and power in which the masses are trampled under the feet of the battling factions.

RIGHTS, liberties, opportunities, the people of Russia had not under the Czar and have not under Stalin.

What has Russia gained by the change from one despotism to another? What is there in either despotism for us in America to envy or emulate?

Is it not about time for all of us Americans to realize that peace and progress and happiness only thrive in the soil of liberty and free democracy?

Is it not time for us to realize that those who are attempting to transform this American Republic into a Communistic tyranny of class against class are, above all others the Number One Public Enemies of our country and our people?

They are the most flagrantly seditious and traitorous element of our community.

When the enemies of the people are deported for the safety of the state, let these come first as the most menacing of those undesirable who are denied citizenship, more dangerous than the criminals, more demoralizing than the imbeciles—and partaking of the dull and degenerate qualities of both.

—WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

ARREST ROAD WORKER FOR STEALING CHICKENS

Horace Fretz, 55, Charged With Theft of Forty Chickens

IS LODGED IN JAIL

HARROW, Dec. 12—Horace Fretz, fifty-five, employed on a road job, was arrested by Trooper Lawrence Prior, of the Doylestown State Police and Constable A. R. Atkinson, of Doylestown, and charged with the theft of forty chickens from the farm of Mrs. Catherine Kimenhour, Nockamixon township.

Fretz was lodged in the Bucks County Prison and will be given a hearing in Doylestown after the officers have completed the investigation. Trooper Prior said this morning at the State Police barracks that Fretz denies stealing the chickens in spite of the fact that the officers found a tag in Fretz' pocket bearing the name of the "Northampton Poultry Market," Easton, where police say, Fretz sold twenty-six chickens on November 20, for $16.80.

The manager of the Northampton County Market is expected to go to Doylestown today to identify Fretz, for he has a receipt from Fretz that police say Fretz signed the day the chickens were sold to the Easton market.

Trooper Prior says that he found information yesterday that leads him to believe that they have the right man.

"Fretz parked his car in a woods near the Kimenhour home on the night of November 18 and the car got stuck in the soft ground," Trooper Prior said today. "We believe that he then went to the Kimenhour place and stole the chickens. The next day, Fretz went back to the Kimenhour place and had the nerve to ask Edwin Kimenhour, a son, to help him get his car out of the woods, explaining that it became stuck the night before as he was trying to take 'a short cut' to his (Fretz's) home."

A short time ago, according to the police, an inspector went to the Fretz place for the purpose of securing Fretz' car for a finance company and that in cleaning out the car, four bags containing feathers, were taken from the car. Kimenhour was informed of the find and reported to the police.

Police went to Easton yesterday where they interviewed an officer of the Northampton County Market who informed them that they made the man, whose police say is Fretz, give them a receipt that $16.80 was paid to him for twenty-six chickens on November 20.

The guests: Miss Clara Capella, Mr. and Mrs. William Romig, Mr. and Mrs. A. Raccagno, Mr. and Mrs. Faust Clotti, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Capella, Mrs. William Capella, Harry Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Capella, Frank Capella, Dorothy Campbell; Misses Angelina Peters, Anna Puccio, Eva Puccio, Angelina Biancasina, Viola Booz, Florence Capella, Nellie Clotti, Veronica Capella, Josephine Clotti; and Francis Clotti.

LANGHORNE AREA BIRTH RATE FAR BELOW DEATHS

Number of Births Are Slightly More Than Half of Deaths For 11-Month Period

DEATHS ARE AVERAGE

LANGHORNE, Dec. 12 — The birth rate for the first eleven months of 1934 in the territory over which the local registrar has jurisdiction, is but slightly more than half that of the death rate.

Deaths in the area for the months of January to November, inclusive, total approximately 48, while the birth rate is only about 28.

The territory included, certificates for which pass through the hands of Burton Stackhouse, the Langhorne registrar, is Langhorne, Langhorne Manor, South Langhorne and Hulmeville boroughs; and Middletown Township which includes Parkland.

Several of the deaths recorded were coroner's cases,—sudden deaths from natural causes or deaths due to accidents.

The death rate, according to the registrar, is about average, but the birth rate is exceedingly low. As a rule the births in most areas are slightly higher than the death rate.

One of the reasons advanced for the low birth rate is that no hospital is located in the territory of the Langhorne registrar, and thus births to localities occurring in hospitals in nearby towns and cities are not credited to this section. On the other hand the majority of the deaths occur in the homes.

Theodore Carlin is Honored At Party at Dudley Home

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dudley, 1808 Benson Place, gave a birthday party last evening at their home in honor of Theodore Carlin, 246 Hayes street, who celebrated his 12th anniversary. The party was a surprise to Theodore and when he arrived at the Dudley home guests had assembled.

Games were played during the evening and prizes won by Angus Gillies, Jr., Charles Strong and Theodore Carlin. Refreshments were served. The room was decorated in red and green, and favors were green baskets filled with candy. Theodore was also the recipient of many gifts.

GREATER AUTHORITY NEEDED IN CRIME DRIVE

National Institute of Criminology Appears to Be in Making

CONFERENCE IS TOLD

By Thomas F. Cullen
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 — (INS) — Greater authority to the Federal Government in the drive against crime loomed today as the result of the national conference in session here.

Under the direction of the Department of Justice, a national institute of criminology appeared to be in the making as the delegates continued their efforts to decide on a constructive program to combat crime. Racketeering and crime claims an annual toll of 13 billions of dollars in this country.

The conference was told of the need for more effective co-ordination of the activities of police and prosecuting officers of the various states. While George Z. Medallie, former U. S. District Attorney in New York, pointed to

SENTENCE DIETERLY TO REFORMATORY AFTER HEARING CASE

Father Said He Was Unaware of Son's Minor Offenses

THREATENED TO SHOOT

Threat and Assault As Result of Quarrel Over the Theft of Dog

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 12—Herbert Dieterly, 18-year-old youth, who lives near Quakertown, was sentenced to Huntingdon Reformatory by President Judge Hiram H. Keller after a jury convicted him Monday afternoon, of a charge of assault and battery, and found him not guilty of two other charges, aggravated assault and battery and assault and battery with intent to kill.

Before pronouncing sentence, Judge Keller told the young man that he no doubt had the wrong slant concerning taking the law into his own hands.

The jury deliberated but a short time.

The trial grew out of an alleged attack on Frederick H. Rice, of Milford Square, following an argument about stealing a dog.

Rice testified that the youth, who was carrying a gun, threatened to blow him to pieces.

The youthful defendant's father explained to the Court that he had no difficulty in keeping his son in hand recently, but was unaware of some of the minor offenses his son was practicing without his knowledge.

President Judge Keller explained to the defendant that in the reform school he would be able to continue his education and learn a trade which would prepare him to earn his own living.

Following testimony offered by Delbert Bachman, Durham electric plant distributor; Margaret Diehl, and Charles Althouse, as character witnesses, the case went to the jury late Monday.

In a trial, which was the result of a cross action in which G. Parker Riegel, of Durham, and George Rhodes, of Easton, and John M. Ziegler and his wife Agnes Ziegler, of Durham, were all charged with assault and battery, and aggravated assault and battery, a jury returned the following verdicts:

John M. Ziegler was acquitted, and the prosecutor directed to pay the costs of prosecution.

Agnes Ziegler, not guilty of the aggravated assault and battery, but guilty of assault and battery.

Riegel and Rhodes, not guilty of aggravated assault and battery, but guilty of assault and battery.

Motions for a new trial were made by counsel for the defendants.

Thomas Ross, counsel for two of the defendants, Riegel and Rhodes, made a motion to have the portion of the verdict in the two cases against John M. Ziegler imposing the costs set aside on the ground that an imposition of the costs was arbitrary and against the evidence.

Judge Calvin S. Boyer granted the motion, stating that such disposition of the costs was arbitrary and unjust in view of the fact that some person had in a cowardly manner shot the two men from ambush, wounding one of them.

The Court also said that the prosecutor had every reason to believe that the defendant was the person who did the shooting.

Judge Boyer further stated he had no criticism of the acquittal, but of the disposition of the costs. The Court explained that he did not wish to criticize the jury, because it was apparent that the verdict was a compromise verdict resulting from a disagreement, but it was also apparent that there must have been one or more jurors who sided with crime and disregarded the law and his own oath.

The Court recommended that such juror or jurors read President Roosevelt's address on neglect of crime prevention and the duty of good citizens to uphold the law.

SUPERSTITIONS

Public education might well mean to draw out, in the sense of to draw out misinformation and replace it with true information. Some educators have this conception of education, of course. However, it apparently is not the system commonly used in the public schools. At any rate, Drs. Otis Caldwell and Gerhard Lundeen of Teachers College, New York City, have found by a survey that more than 33 per cent of 854 pupils of the Albert Leonard junior high school, New Rochelle, believe that it is "a sign of bad luck to have a black cat follow you" and similar superstitions.

One had naturally supposed that youth, the self announced possessor of this age, had pretty well freed itself from the superstitions of an older day. But these two researchers, who for 10 years have been studying the superstitions of the United States, are of the opinion that boys and girls of junior high school age are as superstitious as their elders. As for unfounded statements like "an ostrich hides its head in the sand when threatened with danger," nearly two-thirds of the junior high school pupils questioned at New Rochelle had such misinformation securely placed in their reputed funds of knowledge. Nearly as large a percentage knew that to touch a toad or a frog caused warts on one's hands.

Drs. Caldwell and Otis have found that women are more likely to be superstitious than men, that rural folk are more likely than urban folk to retain old superstitions, and that probably no one, either in town or country, is entirely free of superstitions. However, they believe that such false beliefs are giving way before education. That is apparent, of course. The Middle Ages themselves seem scarcely further behind us than do the days of the witches of New England.

SPLASHING PEDESTRIANS

Montreal and a number of other Canadian cities are supplied with a traffic law which makes liable to a jail sentence any motorist who deliberately splashes a pedestrian.

That's a step in the right direction. No petty offender along the highway is more downright contemptible than the smart aleck who steps on the gas when he sees a pedestrian near a puddle.

His type of offense is without the slightest shade of an excuse, and the wonder is that American courts have permitted him to get away with it for so many years.

REACHING OUT

Are you a stationary sort of person, or do you reach out for better things? The business man, the worker, who just stands still in his tracks, satisfied with what he had yesterday, and trying merely to keep that, has no reason to feel any great confidence in the future. The world moves too fast for him.

The business concern, in particular, must constantly reach out for new trade. Old customers move away, some of them pass away, and people's habits change and they go around from place to place to buy things. A concern needs to advertise to hold its own in the changing world, and it must advertise more and more to make gains.

"BEACH BEAUTY" by ARTHUR SHUMWAY

CHAPTER XXV

"I think you ought to remain on the boat until we sail," Harrow said.

"You do?"
"Absolutely. That prowler may have meant nothing. But there's always the danger that our worst suspicions may not be so far wrong. For your own good you'd better count on moving aboard for a while. That is, if you don't mind."

Here was the problem arising again. "I'll think about it today," she said. "And thanks ever so much for your interest."

"No need to thank me, Kay. You should have a grudge against me for my having gotten you into this. Strange, how remote all this seems from that night when I met you in the auditorium."
"It is strange," she agreed. "But it's interesting, too, and exciting. I'm afraid I like excitement. I thought there never would be any in my life, but here it is, better even than in a movie."

"I have an idea there'll be a lot of excitement in your life, Kay," Harrow prophesied. "There can't help be."

Spike Winch appeared.
"Hello, Kay. Excuse me a minute, will you? See you, Earl?"
"Excuse me, Kay," Harrow joined Spike, who led him forward, holding his arm, talking confidentially.

When she was through with a few letters and Harrow and Spike had gone ashore, Kay sat puzzling over her situation. It was simple enough in general. Harrow had drawn her into this danger and probably she really wasn't safe at home until he had gone. Very well, but that wasn't all. Suppose she did come aboard for the few days the yacht remained in Daytown Beach? There was the Harrow-Spike situation to think of. Ida, in her smoothly insinuating way, had made that pretty clear to her last night. Kay might become only a trouble-maker, and she liked both the men too much for that.

Then there was always the suspicion that maybe this whole business was being engineered by Harrow to get her under his roof that he might insinuate himself into her affections and make of her one of his famous conquests. This seemed silly, of course. For one thing the method would have been complicated. Such a move might have been made with half the trouble and twice the effectiveness. For another thing, there was a ridiculous vanity, she thought, in supposing that Harrow would go to so much trouble merely for her. And she felt that Harrow was more straightforward; he had been very much so in most of his dealings with her. Yet silly as this idea seemed, it had to be considered; had to be remembered in thinking of accepting the man's hospitality.

Another consideration which seemed slight was that townspeople might start wagging tongues if she moved to the yacht. They were wagging them already in some quarters merely because she spent her days there. Gossip, though, loathed Kay not at all. The only way it could affect her would be through her mother. She would hate to have Mrs. Owen worrying about what people might be saying of her daughter.

Kay went home that noon, then rode over to town to see Harrow, the roomer who always rated her as if she were his muse. Harrow was an accountant, a sober, stable sort of chap in whom her mother had great faith. She found him in.

"Did they get that fellow last night?" he asked.

"No. I hope I didn't spoil your night's sleep, waking you up by telephone with a lot of mysterious instructions and all that nonsense?"

"Not a bit of it, Kay. What was it all about anyway?"

Kay told him, then said, "Harry, I want to ask your advice about something. Mother likes you and thinks you're pretty sensible."

"Shoot!"
"Mr. Harrow thinks I should not stay in the house while he's here. He's afraid somebody might make an attempt to get at him through me." She laughed rather foolishly. "She was afraid. 'You see, they might think I was the light of his life or something like that,' she explained lightly. 'Sounds silly, but it does seem to be a possibility.'"

"What does he suggest?"

"Well, he has two guards on the boat, besides Mr. Winch and the crew, and he thinks I'd be safer there. I suppose, in a way, it's silly even to worry about it, but I don't know what I ought to do." Kay waited for him to reply. An expression from this wholesome, conservative man would be indicative of a second portion of public opinion. Of course, she said nothing about the several considerations involved.

Harrow removed his glasses and laid them on his glass-topped desk. He studied them a moment, looked up. "Doesn't it seem a bit drastic?" he said. "Can't the police help?"

She explained why they couldn't. "Well, I'm sure your mother wouldn't want you to do it," he said. "It's really none of my business, but it seems to me that this Harrow has put you in a rather awkward situation."

"But it isn't his fault," Kay said. "Maybe not, maybe not. Well, Kay, that's my idea, anyway. I'd merely be very careful and have as little as possible to do with Harrow beyond earning my salary. As you say, he's only going to be in town a few days more, anyway."

"Well, thank you, Harry."

She rose to go.
"What do you intend to do?" he asked.

"I don't know," she admitted. "It is silly, isn't it?"

"It may not be," Harry said, replacing his glasses and looking at her gravely.

By dinner time Kay had made her decision. What prompted her she couldn't say. Curiosity, perhaps, a perverse spirit, or an interest in the man Harrow. This last she denied to herself the instant she thought of it. Anyway, she found Harrow and said:

"I've been thinking over what you suggested this morning, and probably it would be best if I came onto the yacht for the next few days."

"I'm glad you're so sensible," he replied. "Really, it's the safest course. I hate to sound like a calamity howler or a melodramatic, superstitious fog, but I do think it's the best thing to do. You'll be perfectly comfortable; you won't have the long trip every morning and evening and you'll be out of danger."

"I'll get my things and come back this evening."
"Do that. I'll have Kelly help you. He can take the car. Dinner will be waiting for you here."

"Oh, don't bother about that."
"No bother at all. I'll get Kelly," Kelly, a thick, red-faced man, quiet as a block of stone and evidently as hard, drove her across the river in the big car and waited while she packed a bag. Harry wasn't home, so she left him a note:

"Harry—I've decided Mr. Harrow was right, after all. At that, it doesn't seem to me anything to worry about. I'll stay on the boat until it sails. People don't need to know about it anyway. See you at your office tomorrow. Get in touch with Mr. Harrow if anybody comes prowling again.—Kay."

After dinner she and Harrow sat on deck enjoying the cool breeze. Darkness had come down upon the roofs of the town, upon the river and now the lights of automobiles were beginning to move like fireflies in procession across the distant bridges to the north. Strangely enough, Kay felt peaceful, secure and absolutely at home.

Next day Harrow announced that he thought he was about ready to get away at last. All the really had to wait for now, he explained, was Ida Campbell's return from Washington where she had flown to a party. The mere mention of Ida in connection with the continuation of Harrow's cruise began to upset Kay. She told herself that it was ridiculous that she should give it a thought, but that didn't prevent her from doing so. It was merely that she hated to see Ida so obviously casting a net at Harrow. At least that is what she told herself that morning. Looking out over the water, Kay realized that in a day or so this lovely river would be the emptiest, most desolate body of water in the world.

"Kay," Harrow said, that night, "I certainly wish you were coming along with us."

"I'd like nothing better—in a way," Kay admitted. "But I'm afraid it wouldn't be the thing to do."

"Well, as I've already told you, I'll not try to influence you one way or the other, but you certainly belong aboard that boat when it noses out into that channel and heads south. Palm Beach, Miami, Key West, Havana—and on the way back Nassau. Nights like these, and the soft winds and warm ocean, and it'll be great to get away from all this bothersome business that's been going on. I think that's going to quiet down for a while at least and certainly we'll be away from it once we put out of here. That will be one relief. I'll hate to leave you behind, though, Kay."

His hand moved quietly off the arm of his chair and settled upon her hand. "It's been grand," he said. "You're a great girl. And don't forget I'm really convinced that some one of these days we'll be seeing your name in lights up there in New York. I only hope that when we do, it will be in one of my shows. Long way ahead, of course, but it's possible. If a few years ago anyone had told me I'd be sitting here tonight on this boat, taking it easy—well, comparatively so—I'd have laughed in his face. You never know, Kay."

"No, you never do," she admitted.

Neither of them spoke for several minutes. But Kay's mind was racing about, this way, that way, and in circles. Suddenly, without realizing it in advance, she found herself saying:

"Earl, I do want to go. May I?"

Harrow looked at her, his lips grinning slightly, his eyes shrewd, amused. "Need you ask?"

"I know you must think I'm an awful fool," she blurted, laughing nervously, "but I can't help it. I guess it's the way I do things."

"You've red hair," he said.

"I have red hair," she said.

Their eyes met and held a long time without wavering. First Harrow smiled again; then Kay. Harrow's hand came forward. Kay took it and returned hard grip for hard grip.

"You're the right sort," he said. "Thanks. And you're not so bad."

They heard a step behind them and turned to see Spike Winch.

"Sorry," he said, "sorry. Didn't mean to butt into any conversation."

He turned to go, but Harrow called to him.

"Spike, we've another passenger."

"Yeah?" Spike said slowly, looking from Harrow to Kay, a slight smile beginning to show on his broad mouth.

"Kay's going to come along with us, after all. Now we'll be sure to pick up some fish. She's good medicine."

"Uh-huh," Spike swallowed and shifted his position. "Well, I'm glad you're coming, Kay."

"So am I, thanks, Spike."

"Will you excuse me?" Harrow said. "I have to make a call."

He hurried down the deck and walked lightly down the plank. "Seems happy," Spike observed quietly.

"Earl?" Spike said. He began to shake his head. "I don't know."

"What don't you know?"

"About your coming along. Not that I don't want to see you do it," he added quickly, "just that I don't know, that's all." He shrugged. "Maybe it'll work out. Maybe."

"What do you mean, Spike? Tell me."

"Nothing to tell you, Kay. Just talking. Go ahead—forget it. You know what you're doing. Don't pay any attention to me; I'm kind of screwy sometimes anyway."

Spike went ambling down the deck, hands in his pockets. Kay's eyes followed him, puzzled and concerned. Spike was a gloomy prophet, but Spike was also a shrewd man. What now?

When Harrow came back he suggested taking Kay over to the house for the rest of her things and to make her arrangements for sailing.

"When we do leave it'll probably be all in a hurry," he said, "and any hour at that. So you'd better be all ready in advance."

As he led her down the plank, Kelly and Wagner appeared from behind. Harrow looked back. "Never mind, boys," he said, "just a little quick trip and it's still early."

"Okay," said Kelly, or Wagner. Spike stood leaning against the rail. As Kay and Harrow got into the coupé he lifted a hand lazily, let it drop. Kay gave him a little wave. He turned and disappeared inside the deckhouse.

Neither of the men were at home when Kay and Harrow arrived, so the business took only a few minutes. She gathered together some fishing tackle and a few old clothes, left another note to Harry, promising to stop in at his office in the morning.

They walked down the drive, Harrow carrying her grip and some of the tackle. It was a dark Florida night, the moon not yet up from the ocean, and the odor of jasmine was strong and sweet in the air.

Something happened. What, Kay couldn't tell until well afterward. What she saw was a figure rising from the hibiscus near the gate. She saw, or thought she saw, something glittering. She heard a quick succession of noises—first a soft thud, then immediately a clatter, and upon that a sharp report that made her ears ring. There was a brief grunt and the figure disappeared. Kay whirled toward Harrow. He was standing behind her, an automatic in his hand. At his feet were her fishing rods and her bag. With his free hand he seized her shoulders, whisked her back and pushed her to the ground. With the other hand he raised the automatic. And he fired four times into the hibiscus.

PARISIENNES HAVE DIFFICULT TIME IN CONVERTING THE MEN

Latter Insist On Wearing Business Suits For Evening Affairs

By Nadia De Beaud (I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS—(INS)—There's one thing the boys won't do here. They won't dress up. The girls, yes—but then, everybody knows about the girls.

What they don't know about them—these elegant, charming and chic Parisiennes—is that even they can't bring the boys to the point of putting on a dinner coat, let alone full evening dress or the cutaways they wear on Sundays in New York. Indeed, the girls have made such a failure of bringing the boys up to scratch, in this respect, that a committee has been formed to see what can be done about it.

How seriously the matter is taken, how sadly is regarded the failure of the girls to save the elderly members of the committee from any of the ills that follow over-exertion, is evident from the fact that this same committee is headed by Andre de Fouquieres, "arbitre elegantissime" of Paris, and heir to the great position occupied by the Marquis Boni de Castellane, who among other things, was once Anna Gould's husband.

As Americans may learn with regret, M. de Fouquieres is all stirred up about the way the boys dress for the theater and other places they go in the evening. Wearing at night the same clothes they've worn all day while giving themselves to the vulgar pursuits of commerce! Aside from that, as M. de Fouquieres points out, with an elegance worthy of parliament, most of them don't know what a "gentleman's wardrobe" should contain.

It should have at least a suit of evening clothes, a cutaway, known among the elite as a morning coat, a dinner suit, called here a "s smoking" and in New York a "tuxedo," three or four winter business suits, two or three summer suits, and sport suits, according to the kind of sport one goes in for.

Thus equipped, a man can go anywhere—even to England—without feeling ill at ease.

MARSHALL WILL MEET DUSEK TONIGHT AT ARENA

TRENTON, Dec. 12.—The piece de resistance of the present wrestling season so far as it has gone in Trenton will be offered at the Arena tonight when Everett Marshall meets Emil Dusek.

The match, bringing together two of the top-flight contenders for the crown now worn by Jim Londos, is the most important set in Central Jersey. Never before have two such formidable challengers as Marshall, blonde Colorado miner, and the berserk and villainous member of the Nebraska Duseks, been signed for an engagement here. It was a masterstroke in matchmaking by Johnny Ipp and the chances are he will be rewarded for it.

The contest has "caught on" and it is likely that the largest crowd in Trenton wrestling history will be on hand. Marshall and Dusek have been knocking at the door of the throne room for several years and one of them may yet enter the championship chamber.

Emil is the most spectacular mat-man that has come to the fore this season. He is in the midst of a sensational winning streak and in the past month has fought draws with Jim Browning and Joe Savoldi and beaten Gino Garibaldi, Sander Szabo, Abe Goldberg, Sun Jennings and a host of others. His relentless attack and semi-legal tactics have made him one of the most feared grapplers in the game.

However, when he faces Ev. Marshall he is coming to grips with the best. The lone defeat chalked up against Marshall this season have been Browning and Londos. His famous three-hour struggle with Londos in Philadelphia last season is still discussed by the fans who were fortunate enough to see that titanic clash.

The tussle between these two mat-men is a "natural." They not only rank high but are action providers of the first water.

The popular Abe Goldberg, refreshed by a rest after the leg injury he suffered last week in his bout with Dusek, returns to the wars against the highly colorful Wildcat Ernie Stephens. Frank Bronowicz, favorite

BRISTOL BOWLING CLUB UPSETS ALLEY DOPE

Last night in the Bristol League B. B. C. upset the alley dope by taking 4 points from Rohm & Haas, Boyd being high man with 551 for B. B. C. and Sharkey 533 for Rohm & Haas.

In the American League Rohm & Haas again took a lacing, losing all 4 points to Harriman. Happy Switzer was the star for Harriman, hitting the maples for 550. Keers and Pearson each hit 474 for Rohm & Haas.

In the National League Rohm & Haas reversed things taking all 4 from Madison, Les Satterthwaite being the high man for Madison with 544 and Wright 534 for Rohm & Haas.

In the Federal League White Elephants won 4 easy points, getting 4 from K. of C. by default.

Members of A Langhorne Club Broadcast Program

LANGHORNE, Dec. 12.—The Phi Gamma Club of Langhorne broadcast a radio devotional service, Saturday morning, over station WTNJ, Trenton, N. J. Furman Miles of Bristol was master of ceremonies, and the Rev. Jacobson of the Trenton Church of the Air lead in prayer.

The club members sang several choruses which they learned at the Summer conferences of the Rev. Percy Crawford in the Pocono Mountains. Mrs. Edith Campbell, South Langhorne, sang "Alone," and the Langhorne's Presbyterian women's quartet composed of Mrs. B. Sylvester, Mrs. Earle Felton, Miss Eleanor Knox, South Langhorne, and Miss Laura Riddle, Newtown, sang "Near to the Heart of God."

The Scripture reading was by Miss Dorothy Davison, Middletown. Earle Felton, Vincent Maitha, Gladys Sylvester, Mary Craven and Russell Stompler gave, in a few minutes each, a testimonial to the radio audience. The sermon, an inspiring evangelistic message from Mark, was given by the Rev. Robert B. Cunningham of Langhorne, a recent graduate of Westminster Seminary, Philadelphia.

The last number was a chorus dedicated to Miss Evelyn Corts, Langhorne and of the Phi Gamma, who has been ill for several days.

The Rev. Jacobson said, "This is the most inspiring group and the finest program I have had the pleasure of inviting to WTNJ for a long time." The club is looking forward to another broadcast on January 5th.

Special Peace Program Is Conducted By W. C. T. U.

In recognition of the action of the World Conference in Stockholm at the suggestion of the president, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, in appointing the week beginning December 8th for special peace programs, the Bristol W. C. T. U. meeting last evening in the Travel Club home was largely devoted to consideration of the problem, and Mrs. Boole's slogan, "World peace will come through friendships, not wars." After reading the Scripture story of the birth of the Prince of Peace, and prayer by Mrs. G. A. Coon, the Doxology was sung in thanks for the good news that the war clouds over the Balkans had been lifted by the efforts of the League of Nations under leadership of Anthony Eden, British representative. A petition to President Roosevelt to continue investigation of the munitions industry against which much pressure is being brought to bear, was signed.

Delightful vocal solos "The Bethlehem Babe" by Miss Laura Ellis, and "The Holy City" by Mrs. Earl McEuen; also a Christmas story read by Miss Anna Heritage, were much enjoyed. Mrs. Ada B. Sands gave a report of the state convention at Wilkes-Barre, to which she was a delegate. Miss Jane Rogers presented each one with a small Christmas sock of hard candies.

Christmas donations of food for the needy may be left at 601 Radcliffe street.

Greater Authority Needed in Crime Drive

The system of county government as inefficient in law enforcement Gilbert Bettman of Cincinnati, urged the retention of this form of local government.

Medallie recommended a central investigative organization for all the states and to be as effective as the Department of Justice.

Ferdinand Pecora, a member of the Federal Securities & Exchange Commission and former counsel for the Senate Banking Committee, urged the elimination of the laws giving the defendant the privilege to decline to testify in a criminal case, and the requirement of a unanimous verdict of a jury. In criminal cases he favors a vote of 10 jurors to convict, instead of all 12.

Dr. William A. White, an eminent alienist and superintendent of St. Elizabeth's Hospital here, recommended that persons who have been found to have serious anti-social tendencies be placed in the hands of the state. James A. Johnston, warden of Alcatraz Penitentiary, the United States "Devil's Island" in San Francisco Bay discussed the functions of a modern prison at today's session. He has such prisoners as Al Capone, and George "Machine Gun" Kelly under his charge. Earle Evans, of Wichita, Kan., was listed for a talk on "Crime, the community and the lawyers"; Judge Joseph C. Hutcheson, of Houston, Tex., on local jails, and Dr. Wilmer Souder of the U. S. Bureau of Standards, outstanding expert on handwriting and ballistics, will discuss scientific crime detection.

Other speakers for today included Peter Siccardi, Hackensack, N. J.; J. Weston Allen, Boston; A. C. Lindholm, St. Paul; Gov. J. C. B. Ekringhaus, of North Carolina, and Sanford Bates, Director of Federal Prisons.

Beverly Pastor's Daughter Is Killed By A Truck

BEVERLY, Dec. 12.—While riding a bicycle with her brother and sister near her home last evening, Edith Colwell, 8-year-old daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Hollis W. Colwell, of 158 Warren street, was struck by a truck and fatally injured. She died about two hours later. She suffered a fractured skull, broken leg and probable internal injuries.

The three children were riding along Warren street when a truck operated by Frank Marcink, of 2566 East Ontario street, Philadelphia, drove up behind them. Marcink told police that he saw two of the children and when he swerved sharply to the left to avoid striking them his machine hit Edith. The child's father is rector of St. Stephen's P. E. Church.

Lansing, Mich., Dec. 12.—A steam shovel began biting into the ghostly wreckage of the Hotel Kern today as firemen started their search for the bodies of between 50 and 100 victims believed to have perished in the flames which razed the old structure yesterday. Sixteen were known dead today.

but the exact number of persons whose charred bodies lie in the pyre, remained uncertain, estimates being set at 50 to 100. It was agreed that the number will run closer to the 100 than to the lower figure.

The first unrecognizable body was taken from the ruins of the hotel shortly after 9 o'clock this morning as the steam shovel lifted ton after ton of the debris. Crowds looked on as the snorting monster crushed its way through the crumbled remains of the wall and began its work on the ruins.

Meanwhile, three separate investigations to determine the cause of the fire got under way. Coroner Ray Gorfline prepared to hold an inquest into the deaths. Prosecutor Dan McCullough announced he was starting an inquiry into reports that wild parties in the hotel preceded the fire. "It is entirely possible that a cigarette in the hand of some intoxicated person caused this holocaust," he said. State authorities began an investigation of the fire department's rescue equipment to determine why firemen failed to spread life nets under scores of trapped victims who leaped from windows to land in the street below or in the Grand River which flowed behind the hotel.
